

The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes Adventure VI – The Boscombe Valley Mystery

Is there any more corny incident in the Canon than the scene in which Holmes proclaims, “The culprit is —” and a hotel waiter announces the name of a visitor?

Is its use in this case sufficiently effective to be justified?

Chris Redmond

January 13, 1996