The Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes Adventure XVIII – The Adventure of the Stockbroker's Clerk

There once was a stockbroker's clerk
Who acted a bit like a jerk.

 Though he wasn't a nob
 He ran out on one job,
For a scam – and a dull bit of work.

Sandy Kozinn

Hall Pycroft thought himself a high paid clod
Because of the shifty road as a broker he trod
 The Pinner brothers were one and the same
 And they used Pycroft to help with their game
So, Holmes turned them over to the plod

Karen Olson

Pycroft knew the right price of each stock,
Thus at Mawson's his job was a lock.
 A crook took his place,
 But Holmes solved the case,
So two Beddingtons stood in the dock.

Bill Dorn

Hall is offered a large commission
A good Franco-Midland position
 Both villains have gold tooth
 Pinner can't face the truth
Will swing for their murder admission
